Entente Powers Prepare To Relieve Tragic State Of That Country

Free Passage Of Straits Under Entente Guard Is Guaranteed

(French Wireless Service)
Paris, February 14.—The conference of premiers yesterday morning definitely decided on the text of the reply to Germany on the subject of the surrender of war criminals and on that of the reply to Holland on the question of the extradition of William II. It is understood that the note to Holland will be presented by the French and British Ministers conjointly to the Ministry of foreign affairs at the Hague.

Yesterday afternoon the conference examined a request from Hungary for a further extension of the time within which to reply to the peace terms. The conference decided to grant a week's extension. The premiers also began the examination of the Adriatic question. At the same time conferences were taking place between Marshal Foch and Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson. Although no official statement has been issued on the subject, the Petit Parisien learns that the two marshals discussed the military measures which the allies might eventually be obliged to take against Germany if she persisted in refusing to carry out certain clauses of the Treaty.

Austria's Situation Of Concern To Allies

Paris, February 15.—The situation of Austria was the subject of discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Conference of Ambassadors when M. Jules Cambon presided. As a result of the statements made before the last sitting of the Conference by the Austrian ministers of finance and supplies, the conference decided that the questions of supplies for Austria and of economic reconstruction in that country should be referred for decision to the reparations committee without awaiting the entry into force of the Treaty of St. Germaine.

The conference further resolved to repeat the communication, already made to all the allied countries, calling their attention to the tragic situation of Austria and to the necessity of giving her speedy assistance.

Turkish Sovereignty In Constantinople Guaranteed

London, February 15.—The London Conference yesterday discussed the Turkish question. According to a statement made by M. Millerand to an editor of the Petit Parisien, it was definitely decided that Turkish sovereignty should be maintained in Constantinople, but the free passage of the Straits will be completely guaranteed, that is to say, placed, under the protection of Allied military contingents. Marshal Foch who will remain in London for several days longer will be specially consulted on the military precautionary measures to be taken with regard to Turkey. The question of Asia Minor was touched upon at the afternoon sitting of the Conference but without any solution being reached. M. Venizelos is expected in London today and a decision on the matter can hardly be reached in his absence.

Allied Jurists Discuss Justice Court Plan

Paris, February 14.—The Council of the League of Nations in London has appointed the following to be members of the Commission of Administration of the Sarre district: France: M. Rault, Councillor of State, a former Prefect of the Marne, President; Belgium: Major Lamber, a former Prefect of the Marne; Denmark: Count Nolte Hildebrandt; and the Sarre district, M. de Bosh.

Grey's Return To America Questioned; Wilson Takes Umbrage At Treaty Letter

Secretary Lansing Would Ascertain If His Views Are Those Of Britain—President Regards Epistle As Unpleasant

(Taisho Nichi Nichi Service)
New York, February 4.—In official circles at Washington considerable discussion is going on regarding Lord Grey's letter to the London Times in connection with America's attitude toward the Peace Treaty. It is reported that President Wilson is entertaining an unpleasant feeling relating to Lord Grey's statement and in consequence of this his return to Washington as British Ambassador is regarded as improbable. Secretary Lansing is taking steps to verify whether the views expressed by Viscount Grey represent those of British officialdom.

It is believed that unless President Wilson changes his attitude toward the Peace Treaty question the ratification will not become an accomplished fact for the present. The publication of Lord Grey's letter, however, has produced a new situation and there is every likelihood that the reservations, as first proposed by Senator Lodge, will be passed by the Senate within the next three weeks.

Chin Yun-peng's Days As Premier About Over

BY NATHANIEL PEPPER
(Our Peking Correspondent)
Peking, February 14.—Lu Cheng-hsiang, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has moved out of the Waichiaopu and is about to resign. Vice-Minister Chen Lu has resigned and gone to Tientsin and it looks like the beginning of the end of the Chin Yun-peng Cabinet. In that there is nothing unexpected. Chin's days have been numbered since the first day he became Premier and he has remained as long as this because of the coming of New Year. For even the Anfu Club did not want that post at the time when bills would have to be met. But New Year is only a few days off and Chin's time is growing short. The $5,000,000 loan may prolong his time a bit. In some quarters it is held to have been one of the purposes of the loan—to keep the Anfu Club

Extradition Of All War Criminals Demanded Of Germany

Entente Admit Difficulty Of Surrender Unless Culpability Proved

(Reuter's Service)
London, February 14.—The texts of the notes to Germany and Holland which were definitely agreed upon by the conference of premiers yesterday will not be published until after the notes have been delivered to the respective governments.

It is stated that the note to Germany emphatically demands the extradition of those guilty of clearly proved war crimes of which they were directly responsible. On the other hand the note admits the difficulty of surrendering those whose responsibility is less direct and especially if moral responsibility for the acts with which they are charged rests with others.

The note to Holland is understood to contemplate the eventual extradition of the Kaiser being interned outside Europe, for example in the Dutch Indies.

Undesirability Of Kaiser's Presence Pointed To Dutch

London, February 13.—The Supreme Council at Downing Street today considered the reply to the Dutch note of January 23, refusing the extradition of the ex-Kaiser. It is understood that the reply will not repeat the demand for the surrender of the ex-Kaiser but will point out the undesirability of retaining him in Holland both in the interests of Holland and of the peace of Europe.

The Council also considered the German informal reply regarding war criminals. It is understood that Germany has declined to surrender the latter but has offered to try them before a German tribunal. It is expected that the Council's final answer will be drafted this afternoon and immediately telegraphed to Germany.

Later, it is announced that the Supreme Council's notes with regard to the ex-Kaiser and the other war criminals have been finally settled and will now be forwarded to the Dutch and German Governments respectively. The contents of the notes will not be published until replies have been received.

French Co-operation With British Urged

(Reuter's Service)
Paris, February 11.—Interviewed by the Paris Daily Mail, M. Millerand said that he was a strong supporter of the closest possible relations between France and Great Britain and that if he received any encouragement from Mr. Lloyd George nothing would please him more than to undertake a full discussion of all outstanding questions on the lines of M. Delcasse's famous program which had resulted in the Entente Cordiale.

The Daily Mail adds that it understands that M. Millerand would like to go further and to establish a close Franco-British alliance, in which French public opinion cordially supports him.

Japanese Troop Ships With Cavalry And Artillery Reach Vladivostok

(Reuter's Pacific Service)
Vladivostok, February 16.—Medvedeff, head of the Social Revolutionary government here who has just returned from Nikolai states that the discipline of the Red army is excellent. The Zemstvo are encountering no obstacles in their work of administration and their relations with the Japanese are satisfactory. He adds that the latter fact is confirmed by the commander-in-chief of the Red Army who is a Bolshevik.

Two Japanese troop ships with cavalry and artillery arrived here yesterday.

The commander of the Red army operating against Habarovsk expects to take the place any day. It is stated that the Japanese have handed over eight of General Kaiminoff's officers to the Red army.

Russian Refugees Denied Japanese Landing Permit

Osaka, February 16.—The steamer Penza of the Russian Volunteer fleet arrived at Tsuruga from Vladivostok this morning. Her arrival has aroused great interest in view of the present situation at Vladivostok. It also appears to have greatly disturbed all on board the Russian warships Oriol and Yakut which recently took refuge at Tsuruga from Vladivostok. The majority of the refugees on board these two vessels have not yet been allowed to land because they do not possess means of livelihood.

Vladivostok, February 15.—The following are the conditions of the armistice arranged between the Czechs and the Soviet army: (1) A neutral zone shall be established between the Czech rear guard and the Soviet advance guard.

(2) The Soviets shall supply the Czechs with coal.

(3) The Czechs shall hand over the gold which they have been guarding at Irkutsk.

(4) The Czechs shall not assist the anti-Bolshevik forces.

General Rozanoff prior to his flight to Japan sent out from Vladivostok gold of the exchange value of Yen 55,000,000 which has been placed to his credit at banks in Japan and Shanghai.

The Zemstvo representative for foreign affairs is drawing up a protest against Japan for harboring the "Russian traitors" who escaped in the Oriol from Vladivostok to Japan.

The Japanese have agreed to hand over the guarding of the Sushan coal mines to the miners.

Remove Necessity For Intervention Say Zemstvos

Vladivostok, February 8.—Removal of the conditions which make for intervention in Russia, and end of civil war and the institution of peace and order among the people—these are the stated aims of the new Zemstvo regime in this province, according to its first proclamation, issued shortly after noon today.

The Province Zemstvo headquarters were taken over by the revolutionists at about 10 o'clock this morning. Guards were placed at the doors and the memorandum by the revolutionist military leaders recognising the authority of the Zemstvo was delivered to the Province Zemstvo Committee, whose first proclamation is being (Continued on Page 3)

British Ready To Discuss Situation In Central Europe

(Reuter's Service)
London, February 15.—Presiding at a government luncheon yesterday to the delegates to the Imperial Statistical conference, Sir Auckland Geddes, President of the Board of Trade declared that the government regarded the conference as most important because the Cabinet at present had to make decisions affecting the destiny of every part of the Empire in almost complete ignorance of the real position of the Empire. The Government wanted to see the statistical machinery of the Empire placed on a satisfactory basis, which would enable it to supply information at present lacking.

PAINTING GIVEN FOR RELIEF FUND

Amateur Work of Mrs. James Macbeth To Be Raffle Astor House Ball

There is at present on exhibition in the showrooms of Messrs. Squires, Bingham and Co., 11A Nanking Road, a particularly fine specimen of amateur oil painting, the work of Mrs. James Macbeth, a lady well-known in the art circles of Shanghai.

The picture, painted on a canvas measuring 40 x 60 inches, is of an Autumn Sunset in a rural district of West Flanders. Mounted in a massive gold frame which was specially designed and made for it by the French fathers at Succawei, it will make an exceedingly handsome ornament for the home of whoever is fortunate enough to win it in the raffle which will be drawn for the benefit of the local Refugee Relief Fund, on the occasion of the Ball to be given in aid of the refugees at the Astor House on Thursday night, February 26.

Tickets for the raffle at $2 can be obtained from Messrs. Squires, Bingham and Co. All who are interested in art should not fail to see this picture, which besides its own intrinsic merit has the additional appeal of being the work of a local resident.

The following is the 8th subscription list to the Shanghai Refugee Relief Fund.

The amount of $1,000, donated by Mr. E. S. Kadoorie, as published in the first subscription list Dec. 22 was paid on December 24 by telegraphic transfer at rate of exchange of that day, Tls. 73.1, and said cheque (Tls. 731) was deposited in full account at bank. Therefore to bring the published lists into agreement with the bank pass-book adjustments as shown below are made now.

possible for him to stay. For one thing, they have used the Shantung question. Tuan Chih-fu, Little Hsu and the other leaders have pressed for direct negotiations. Wang Yi-tang and the Anfu Club officials have been taking a virtuous attitude. Which over Chin does, he will face political fire.

MAY BE WANG

Who will be next Premier? Wang Yi-tang seems most likely now. But Gen. Wang is in Shanghai trying hard for peace. Another candidate for the premiership is Li Sou-hao, present Minister of Finance. Li also is a loyal Anfu man. Another man who is talked of considerably is Tsao Ju-lin. Tsao has been taking an increasingly active part in affairs in the last two months and has slowly been coming out of the retirement into which he was driven by the students last June. Now, it must be understood that while Tsao has been out of office he has never been out of power. He has controlled the financial arteries of the government through his control of the Ministry of Communications just as effectively as if he were still minister. Tseng Yu-chen, the nominal Minister, has been satisfied with this arrangement because his interests are identical with Tsao's, and he has had in addition the privilege of placing in lucrative posts his Pukien fellow-provincials. Tsao Ju-lin has been mentioned for Minister of Finance. He has been mentioned even for Foreign Affairs, though it is doubtful whether the Anfu Club feels itself secure enough to give that affront to popular indignation.

ANFUTES TO RULE

Whoever the individuals are, a complete Anfu Club will be welcomed. It will clear the air and throw the issue into high relief. The Anfu Club runs things anyway. Let it run them wholly. It has never had undisputed sway. Let it have it. In the first place, anything is preferable to the present stagnation. In the second place, a few months of Anfu rule will result in the broadening and strengthening of the national movement to rid Peking of the incubus that is bearing the government down to ruin. A little more militarist plundering, a few more Japanese loans, and the opposition now being created out of public sentiment may be unified into a potent and decisive force.

These last few months there has been only marking time and camouflage. There has been a sort of half-hearted opposition to the Anfu Club, or to the extreme Anfutes, by what are known as the moderate Anfutes, headed by Premier Chin Yun-peng. That opposition has been not so much out of patriotism as out of personal jealousy. Little Hsu and Chin are rivals for the favor of Tuan Chih-fu. They are his disciples—nominally; actually Little Hsu is Tuan's master. But in the hierarchy of officialdom Tuan is the senior and they are his disciples. And if Chin has been excessively moderate and virtuous it has been in the main because that was his only ground of opposition to Little Hsu. Of course, he has lost. Little Hsu has not dominated Tuan for so many years to lose his dominance to Chin now. Chin is not enough of a personality for that. Besides, Little Hsu has the power. But it is necessary not to be deceived by the outward appearances of the last few months and not to pin too much faith in the so-called moderates. A moderate Anfuite is only a less offensive Anfuite. Both kinds are offensive.

Offensive or not, their strength is dominant here and the country stands to benefit by a period of their unrestricted exercise of it. For a time matters will be worse, but they probably have to be worse in order to get better. As the writer said in a previous article, the more rope the Anfu Club gets the sooner it may hang itself.

After Zan Yi-zung stole a pair of pants he repented—that is, he felt sorry when he saw a burly policeman at his heels. And so he discarded his loot.

Yau Ching-yen saw the garment fall from the fugitive's grasp and went to the rescue. But, discovering he could not return it and finding that the parcel contained a badly-needed addition to his wardrobe, he hiked off home with it.

Just how Tsang Sian-wan became involved in the fracas was not revealed at the Mixed Court yesterday but he, too, got a sentence of six months.

Tsang Sung, pinched with the other three culprits, was sent home rejoicing.

Armed robbers cajoled an amah at 50 Baikal Road into admitting them to the house and then stabbed her in the face, the Mixed Court was regrettably told yesterday. The three men accused were ordered detained for two weeks while the matter is thought over by the authorities.

The mistress of the establishment blew a police whistle when she saw the intruders. That was the first intimation the amah had that anything was wrong, she said.

The accused men maintained that they were wholly innocent and offered the alibi that they didn't have a bit of loot in their possession when they were arrested.

Dau Dung-too and Tseng Yun-ching believe in freedom of religious thought. No one has interfered with that belief but when they began to practise the theory of freedom of religious accessories they ran afoul of the law and one is spending a month, the other twice that time, in prison.

It was related in the Mixed Court yesterday that the pair stole a pair of candlesticks, an incense burner, a drinking pot and various other impediments of a house of worship from 75 Kwangse Road. The surmise was that a new

House of Worship, presumably of some new faith, was about to be established, and the prison "yawned" for the offenders, failing to close the yawn before they were safely within.

Being industrious persons, two Chinese took a course in masonry and started a few experiments on the wall of an establishment on Ferry Road. They were interrupted in their archaeological experiments by a Chinese police constable and one of them is deterred from celebrating the New Year and will not associate with his friends for about eleven months. The other is probably among the festive boys who are daily firing bombs on Soochow creek.

POLITICAL CRISIS BREAKS IN HONAN

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, February 16.—A Kaifeng message states that a serious political situation has arisen in Honan apparently owing to the attempt on the part of the Central Government to remove the Tsuchun Chao Ti.

General Wu Kuang-hsin with considerable forces has crossed the Southern border of the province moving towards Sinyangchow and there are rumors of strange troops having been seen along the Peking Hankow railway further north.

Chao Ti, is believed to be willing to resign, the message continues, if it is desired but his military followers appear to be getting ready to fight.

The populace is most perturbed and it seems certain that fighting will ensue unless the Government compromises allowing Chao Ti to retain his military following though resigning the civil governorship.

BERLIN GLOOMY AS PEACE COMES

Pessimism Widespread Because Of The Huge Problems Ahead

DUBIOUS ABOUT RESOURCES

War Payments And Other Obligations Regarded As Burdensome

Berlin, January 12.—German press and politicians view with darkest pessimism events expected to follow ratification of the treaty. Peace has come when conditions are felt in many quarters to be tending to inevitable catastrophe from the thousand and one evil consequences of the war, and even the most patriotic and capable men throw up their hands in despair at the prospects.

This view is taken by even the most moderate newspapers, while organs on the extreme Right and Left are nothing but red. The Deutsche Zeitung admonishes its readers to wait and watch and prepare for revenge; while the independent and Communist organs dazzle their readers with the prospect of a world revolution that will swamp all Europe, leaving nothing but ruins, among which the victors and vanquished of 1920 will meet on equal terms to construct some new edifice.

Members of the Government, however, especially the Socialists, still put on a brave face and assert they may yet be able to steer the national ship into a haven of safety. Bankers and manufacturers declare that they could do much if they only had coal, willing workmen and raw products, but their faith seems assumed to impress foreigners. They in their hearts realize the ill-fatedness of this trinity.

Despite Germany's defeat, despite the awful trials they have gone through, despite the peace conditions now taking effect, the working classes think and act as if they lived in the Germany before 1914. So far as her economic conditions are concerned, to which they add the benefits of a free republicanism bestowed by the revolution, optimism to them is "less work, higher wages, no bombing." It calls them to see so many persons still about who seemingly do not work, spend lots of money and lord it over everybody—Kriegschiebers, or war and revolution profiteers in the city and junkies in the country.

The masses do not even realize Germany's crushing defeat, they do not know that the whole world has turned against their nation, they believe themselves cheated out of the fruits of the revolution, and dream of a still more radical upheaval. The belief that this will come is gaining ground rapidly among all classes, and if the truth must be told, the awful prospect of Germany following Russia's example is viewed by numerous sober-minded persons with astonishing indifference. They shrug their shoulders and say:

"Better a terrible end than an endless terror."

Among the many pessimistic articles treating with "so-called peace," one by Walter Rathenau, in the Vossische Zeitung, after recounting the sum of calamities making up Germany's misery ends by stating that perhaps they might yet prevent catastrophe.

"First nothing must be exported," he says, "except what is absolutely necessary for manufacture. Secondly, nothing must be imported that is not absolutely necessary. Thirdly, no luxuries should be manufactured for the home market; only necessities. Fourthly, the system of transportation must be thoroughly reorganised; repair shops should, if no other way is possible, be turned over to workmen's co-operation."

ing organisations, which must see to a reasonable amount of labor being done. Fifthly, coal production must be increased no matter at what sacrifice. Mines should multiply the number of pits and provide housing for their workmen. Sixthly, all available water-power must be harnessed immediately. Seventh, all coal devolving establishments not absolutely necessary should be immediately closed.

This might make the beginning, concludes Rathenau, and would serve Germany as well as the Entente much better than the theoretic taxing schemes, for a man who is deadly ill it is more important that he have his heart or lung cured than have his household accounts properly balanced.

Shanghai Canadians Will Give Supper

Constitution Is Outlined At Meeting Of Organisation Yesterday Afternoon

Canadians resident in Shanghai who have recently formed a Canadian Club held an enthusiastic meeting in the Canadian Trade Commissioner's office yesterday afternoon when a constitution was outlined and arrangements made for a supper which will be informal and which is to take place at the Astor House at 7 o'clock the evening of February 26. Moving pictures of Canadian scenery and trade are to be shown at the Chinese Y.M.C.A. on the same night.

On the subject of the constitution the meeting yesterday decided that the object of the organisation in China will be to foster good fellowship between all Canadians in the Orient and to promote the interests of Canada in all possible ways. It was reported at the meeting that the membership is now over fifty and is increasing rapidly, not only of Canadians living in Shanghai, but in other centers in China in which an active interest in the new body has been awakened. For the benefit of those living outside Shanghai it was announced that Canadians may register for membership by addressing the Secretary, Mr. S. P. Westaway, in care of the Canadian Trade Commissioner.

Fourteen new names were added to the membership roll at the meeting.

Provincial Council Assumes All Power

Under pressure of the unanimous opinion of the military, professional and public organisations, and in view of the direct treachery committed on public and state affairs by the fragments of the Kolchak power, the Province Zemstvo Council has decided to assume temporarily all state power within the limits of the province, says the proclamation.

The step has been produced by exceptional incidents and not for a moment will the Zemstvo forget that this step is a temporary one. There will no attempt to convert this temporary power into lasting authority and thus, to create an independent government structure in the district.

On the contrary, continues the proclamation, the power will be relinquished any time the people desire it.

Government Problems Are Laid Before People

The following problems are submitted to the people as a part of the government's activity:

1. Release all political prisoners—victims of the Kolchak government.
2. Liquidate as soon as possible and without trouble the remnants of Kolchak rule in the province.
3. Institute freedom of speech, meetings, unions, strikes and in general all freedom destroyed by the fallen government.

4. Institute public control in order to safeguard state possessions from theft.
5. Organise the question of food supply and barter by the combined forces of self-government and co-operative organisations so as to cope with the sharp crisis of food supply and foods.

6. Fix standard rates of wages for laborers and employees of private, public and government institutions, bringing it into line with the existing high cost of living. Institute special committees for working out these problems, with representatives of the workmen and employees.

7. Assist in regulating the position of land affairs by re-establishing the Land Committees.

End All Intervention Is Plea Of Zemstvo

3. Undertake all means toward the fullest possible satisfaction of the public and economic requirements of the people in respect to rural education and general welfare.

"In early acknowledgment of the evil which foreign intervention has brought to the Russian national cause by supporting and aggravating the civil war and obstructing the re-establishment of normal life," says the concluding paragraph of the proclamation, "the Provincial Zemstvo Council will adopt all measures to remove the conditions which are assisting the continuation of intervention. Every co-operation will be given in particular to affording the Czech-Slovak troops unhindered evacuation."

"The Council invites all citizens of the province to be fully cognizant of the importance and responsibility of the present movement. In the general interests of the Motherland and in friendly unity with the elected organs of self-government to apply all forces towards a speedy restoration of law and order, and normal economic life, with the deep trust in United, Great, and Free Russia."

The proclamation is signed by A. Medvedieff, president of the Zemstvo Council, and by A. Rusanoff, P. Popoff, S. Afanasieff and A. Menahkoff, members.

ALLIES TO FORCE GERMANY TO LIVE UP TO PROMISES

heard a report by M. Leon Bourgeois on the constitution of an international Court of Justice. This question was referred to an international committee of jurists.

Neutrals Must Share

Problems Of Finance

London, February 15.—Referring to the decision of the League of Nations Council to call an international conference to deal with the financial problem, M. Marsal, French Minister of Finance, in a statement to the press said, "Enormous progress has been made. The financial question is not only an Allied question. There are also the neutrals who, many of them, have gained by the war and must in consequence, if only in their own interest, take part in the consolidation of a state of things which is so favorable to them."

In the course of the meetings at the Treasury during the last few days statements were made by each of the Technical delegates—French, Belgian, Italian and British. M. Marsal's statement will be handed to the special representatives appointed by the French Government to the International Conference organized by the League of Nations.

Germans Must Quit Saar Basin Plans

(Reuter's Service)

London, February 15.—The Council of the League of Nations at the second day's proceedings at St. James palace yesterday settled the organization of the Saar Basin and rejected the request of four German communes for inclusion in the Saar region on the ground that the treaty does not empower the Council to make changes of delimitation.

The second public meeting of the League of Nations Council was held this afternoon. The meeting was opened by Mr. Balfour who in a brief speech declared that after the experience of the last few days he looked forward to the future of the Council with the utmost confidence.

A business-like and conciliatory spirit had been shown and it had been demonstrated that the League would be of incalculable service to mankind.

Switzerland Permitted To Retain Neutrality

M. Leon Bourgeois submitted a report regarding the proposed court of international justice. It was resolved to refer the question to a commission of legal experts, and that the question should be discussed at the next meeting of the Council. It was also resolved to refer the question of a permanent organization to deal with matters relating to transit, waterways, ports and railways to the existing French commission, and that of a permanent organization for health affairs to the existing British commission. The Council decided to admit Switzerland as an original member of the League while permitting Switzerland to retain neutrality in view of her special position. It was further resolved to convene an international conference to study means of remedying the financial crisis.

The session of the League of Nations Council closed after the public meeting. The next session will be held in Rome, about the middle of March.

This evening a government dinner was given to the delegates. The Home Secretary presided and the company included the high commissioners for New Zealand and South Africa. The chairman dwelt on the necessity of the establishment of a central bureau of statistical information which should be a clearing house for the empire. The government, he said would warmly welcome such a movement. The conference had done great work. The chairman added that he was satisfied that an international statistical bureau under the League of Nations would duly arrive.

BRITISH NATIONAL DEBT AT MAXIMUM SAYS CHAMBERLAIN

(Reuter's Service)

London, February 12.—In the House of Commons today in the debate on the address from the throne Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland moved an amendment regretting that the government's expenditure had been so high, causing a depreciation of the national credit and an increase in the cost of living.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying, contended that high prices were due to world causes. For example, the world's sugar production was short. No sugar was coming from Russia, Germany or Austria while the United States wanted immensely more sugar to compensate for alcohol. He believed that the national debt had reached its maximum and that henceforward the movement would be downwards.

The next essential would be the funding of the floating debt. Mr. Chamberlain expected that the financial year would end more favorably than was anticipated. Revenue was coming in well and prospects were good. He emphasized that while there was every reason for care there was absolutely no reason for panic.

Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland's amendment was rejected by 188 votes to 44 and the address unanimously adopted.

Reports On Medical Work In The Shantung Christian University

The remarkable work being conducted by the hospital and the school of medicine of the Shantung Christian University, Tsinan, is described in the annual reports for the institution, which have just made their appearance.

The hospital, consisting of a large, modern, three-story in-patient department, with accommodation for over 100 patients, and an out-patient dispensary, was erected in 1914. The present report contains careful recording of the incidence of diseases in a particular locality with details of cases of scientific interest and some very interesting statistics.

The graduation of the largest class in the history of the school of medicine was recorded last year. Thirty-two men have passed their final examinations. Of these, 21 came down from the Union Medical College in Peking in 1916, while the remaining 11 were of the original class of the university. There are 26 professors and instructors. During the year, 99 students were enrolled.

The present school of medicine at Tsinan represents the amalgamation of the Union Medical College, Tsinan, the University of Nanking medical department and the Union Medical College, Hankow, together with three classes of students transferred from the Peking Union Medical College, this amalgamation being effected in 1916-17 on the initiation of the council on medical education of the China Medical Missionary Association.

The support of the school is derived from nine co-operating mission boards: Baptist Missionary Society, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, London Missionary Society, Wesleyan Missionary Society, English Presbyterian Mission, American Presbyterian Mission (North), Southern Presbyterian Mission, Lutheran United Mission and Canadian Presbyterian Mission.

AMERICAN SCHOOL OPENS IN KULING

(China Press Correspondence)

Kiukiang, February 10.—The Kuling American School has opened again for the second half of the school year after several weeks' Christmas vacation. The pupils were met at the steamship lines by different members of the faculty and escorted across the plain in the automobile and then up the mountain. All reported a jolly time during the vacation. Santa Claus did not arrive at Kiukiang this year until late. For different reasons he could not get here until sometime in January. But when he did come he made every youngster's heart glad with Teddy Bears and candy. We all want to give Santa a special thanks because of his persistence in trying to get here this year.

The Government and Mission School have closed for the Chinese New Year vacation. They will reopen the first part of March. The late opening this year will give a very short second term of only about fourteen weeks. And with the Shantung question still on the fence, there is a possibility of this being broken into and the time being made still shorter.

In this section of Kiangsi province we have been having a very dry fall and winter until a week ago when we had our first rain in several months. The farmers were beginning to prophesy disastrous results for the crops the coming year.

Snowfall Breaks Up Long Winter Drought In Shensi

(China Press Correspondence)

Shanfu, Shensi, February 7.

Our long winter drought was broken by a beautiful snowfall which covered the ground for two inches last week. Previous to this the foodstuffs, especially grains, had risen tremendously in prices.

For example, early last Fall one could buy wheat for 600-800 cash per "teu," but last week it was as high as 2,800 cash! This gradual, and later on, abrupt, rising of prices made the people uneasy. Frequent and many have been the robberies in the city on account of the poorer classes not being able to buy food. The other day a certain mission station here was entered in the early morning, the thieves having gotten over the back wall of the compound by means of an improvised crude ladder. It was made from a bamboo pole with bricks tied on for rungs, and they were muffled by being covered with pieces of rags. The intruders helped themselves in the dining and sitting rooms to over a hundred taels worth of goods.

The police are still working on the case, but as yet have no clue.

The natives seem very pessimistic about the future, especially concerning political and temporal matters. Our William Cullen

Bryant has something to say to those who lament the degeneracy of their time, and are filled with gloomy forebodings of the future,

when he says:

"Oh, not a thousand cheerful

omens give

Hope of yet happier days

whose dawn is nigh.

He who has tamed the elements, shall not live

The slave of his own passions; he whose eye

Unwinds the eternal dances

Of the abyss of brightness

Dares to span

The sun's broad circle, rising

Yet more high.

In God's magnificent works

His will shall scan.

And love and peace shall

Make their paradise

With man."

When one knows how they suffered the last several years from official corruption, one can hardly blame them for looking at the dark side. But we foreigners believe that China is passing through a period of transition, and better days are coming, we trust, for this land of great opportunities. There are opportunities for missionary native and foreign, and for merchant. It is up to those concerned, to grasp them, and utilise them for China's benefit.

Opium planting is still going on in some out-of-the-way places, in spite of reports to the contrary.

A little more revenue is needed, and this course is a paying proposition, though it is degrading the province. Opium shops are not hindered from carrying on their rotten trade, and a thriving business is therefore the result. The wheat crop will not be as large as needed because the people had already planted opium, and finally had to root it up again, but then it was too late to sow wheat. The people are blinded by those in authority.

The soldiers of our Tuchen are still engaged in their little private hold-ups, and are living on the people, especially in the villages.

They are robbing daily and are not brought to justice for their impropriety. How can they, when their officers are afraid of them?

We must say, though, that the soldiers in our city are behaving fairly decent, though one can never tell when they'll rebel. It was rumored last week that a company of soldiers mutinied in a city 80 li from here. A com-

after to investigate. Have heard nothing since. About a month or so ago Kansu troops—some say a regiment, but we doubt there were so many—came here to meet a certain high official who had come from Peking with a good quantity of ammunition, and to escort him to Kansu. During their sojourn here of nearly five days, it must be said to their credit that they behaved splendidly. We had occasion to see much of them. They were men of fine physique and could evidently give an account of themselves when called upon. Quite a contrast to many of the Shensi troops who look so enervated from their constant addiction to opium.

It is said "of making many books there is no end," but it seems to be the same with the making of sects. A certain Chinese teacher here has recently introduced himself as the founder of a new cult, which is to make a new earth, a new heaven, and a new Jerusalem. There are to be three successive stages in accomplishing this fact, and we trust that he may find his way to "no man's land," where he can assume nobody. He has known the true light, but some silly notion has gotten possession of his mind. We do not know whether he has succeeded in acquiring any adherents or not.

A letter was written him by a missionary here for an explanation of his "revelation," but he evidently wishes to avoid the foreign missionaries.

The Mob and the Maid — By Damon Runyon

OUTSIDE, a cold wind was beating upon the New Mexican hills, and, with a chilling rain as a lash, was whipping a mass of gray clouds across the valley toward the Raton Range. There was a suggestion of snow in the air, and the sheep had huddled up close to the adobe house, hunking themselves along the hillside. They looked like spray caught in the rocks alongshore.

Inside we were as warm and comfortable as a hearty supper, and a roaring eight feet of fireplace could make us. Old Jim Worrell, our host, was sitting in a chair, and we were smoking and gossiping about the ranchmen along the Cimarron. Old Worrell had some observation or reminiscence about each one.

"First time I ever see old Jesus Gonzales was back in '12," he remarked, speaking of his nearest neighbor, accounted the wealthiest man in the valley. "How'd he get his money? Well, I don't know about that. By being honest, I suppose. When he first came out here he was a freighter. He had a team of steers, but finally he got tired of freighting and turned the steers out on pasture. In a few years them steers had multiplied into a large herd of cattle."

"You know Bill Cavanaugh, down on the lower range? Well, Bill he came to this country about the time I did and all he had was a pair of branding-irons. In a few years them brands of his'n was hung on everything that runs on four legs around this country, and he was thinking some of branding the two-legged critters, when they all up and abandoned the country to him."

"It only goes to show what perseverance and a pair of branding-irons will do for a man."

"Take Check Chase, who owns the Circle Zero over here. Check's got a wife, but he didn't do it on purpose. Check got to playing poker one night with Sam Halliway. They both owned pretty good ranches and some sheep. Sam was married, and his wife had something of a reputation hereabouts for temper and homesickness."

"Check won all the money Sam had on him, and the game was just getting exciting. Finally Sam offered to bet everything he owned in Colfax County against everything Check owns. Check agrees and wins the pot. Sam skipped out the next morning. When Check went to take possession of Sam's place and told Mrs. Sam the circumstances, she says:

"Everything he owns, eh? All right, that includes me. I belong to you now, Mr. Chase. Come to my arms!"

"But Check didn't. He was so scared he hops on his horse and lights out, and he's never been near her since. She still lives on the ranch, now one of the best in the territory, and she always refers to it as Check's, and to Check as her husband. Check he don't take no road that leads in eight miles of the ranch."

"Did you ever see Jose de la Cruz, who lives down the Thimbera? He's one of the wealthiest Mexicans around here, and always has been. Ever notice how he lets his hair grow long on the sides? That's because he's shy a couple of ears."

"I'll tell you why, but first I've got to introduce Nondas Garcia to you. And Johnny Everson. Johnny and Nondas don't live around here now; all this happened a long time ago, anyhow, when we was a lot younger."

"Nondas was the prettiest thing you ever saw in your life anywhere. She was full-blood Mexican, and daughter of old Candido Garcia, who owned the El Morello ranch and who was sheriff of the county the time I'm telling about."

"Nondas was animated dynamite. She could ride like a cow-puncher and shoot a rifle or revolver better than any man around here, and she was mostly doing it for fun."

"Jose de la Cruz was a young fellow then, and lived on the ranch next to Garcia's. He was stuck on Nondas, and she seemed to be on him. They was always together. Old Garcia and old De la Cruz was tickled stiff at the idea of joining them two ranches."

"Johnny Everson was a long, lank, good-looking kid, who'd been doing odd jobs around this country for some years. He was an Easterner, but he'd forgotten it, like the rest of us."

"In them days, when government was young, we had to give the sheriff and most of the other important offices to the Mexicans, but we reserved the right to dictate the principal deputies ourselves. So when we elected old Garcia sheriff we named Johnny as his under sheriff."

"The county seat used to be over at Trinchera, and the sheriff lived there during his term of office. His job was no snap, either, because the country was just getting civilized and he had plenty to do. The jail was an adobe building, one story high, next to the court house. Johnny stayed in town most of the time; and old Garcia, who liked his authority a good deal, was also there pretty much."

"Nondas used to come galloping into town with De la Cruz at her heels about every day, and all hands was smacking their lips, thinking about the big fiesta Garcia would give when they got married."

"And I expect all our dreams would have come out all right if Nondas hadn't seen Johnny. First thing we know Johnny was hanging around after her like a shadow, and she seemed to like it, too. You can bet De la Cruz didn't. He gave Johnny some fierce looks, and scowled at him fearful, but Johnny didn't mind. Nondas egged them both on. She was like all girls, and appreciated competition."

"Johnny got to acting like a moon-eyed calf, and his friends felt worried about him a lot. No one ever figured it was anything serious, however. We thought Nondas would string Johnny along just for fun to make De la Cruz sore, but when the time got around for her to marry she would marry her Mexican."

"One time there was a fandango down at Gonzales, and Everson couldn't be there. He was out hunting some rustlers. Johnny had a reputation for sticking to duty that he thought a heap of, and we thought a heap of him for it, because in them days the Mexican officials were not always what you might call painstaking. They allowed themselves to be diverted a good deal."

"Old John Campbell was joking Nondas about her two admirers—just to worry De la Cruz, who was there, of course—and she was taking it good-natured."

"I guess Jose here is the most faithful of the two," said old John. "I'll bet he wouldn't be running off after rustlers when there was a chance to dance with you. Ain't much he wouldn't do at your order, is there?"

"And why not Senor Everson?" asked Nondas.

"Well, Johnny might do a good many things for you, but if it conflicted with his duty he'd balk," says old Campbell.

"What will Senor Campbell wager that Senor Everson would not abandon duty at my word?" she asked.

"Old John looked her over for a moment and says: 'Ten head of cattle against a kiss.'"

"Done!" says Nondas in a flash. Every one in the room had heard the bet, and most of the Americans there was close friends of Johnny's. Nondas seemed to think of this, because she said:

"I must ask that no one tell Senor Everson of the wager."

"Of course no one could after that, and no one thought about the bet as anything but a joke, anyhow."

"You can believe that De la Cruz was not pleased with the bet. I watched his dark, scowling face, and he was considerably disturbed. I thought it would do no harm to tell Johnny to keep his eye on that fellow, first chance I got."

"Nondas got to coming to town oftener than ever, and used to come without De la Cruz. She and Johnny used to take long rides together, and they were getting pretty thick. How it would have panned out if it had run to a peaceful conclusion there's no telling. A few drinks of Martinez's whisky brought it to a rapid decision."

"One drink of old Martinez's whisky would make a rabbit spit in a hound's face. I think the record was six drinks and a reach, and that was made by Big John Summers, foreman of the Long's Canon outfit, just before he passed from our midst along of being a trifle slow after calling Sid Carruthers a liar."

"Anyhow, a sheep-herding cuss from down the valley comes along and gets outside of a lot of that liquid barb wire and runs amuck. Candido Garcia went to arrest him, and the sheep-herder sticks a knife into Candido from a foot to a foot and a half. It didn't hurt Candido a whole lot, but it made him pretty sick. Johnny Everson pounds the sheep into docility and packs him off to jail. A sawbones patches old Garcia up almost as good as new, but he has to go to bed."

"Nondas shows she is still a woman by flopping over into his arms in a faint."

"Nondas came tearing into town when she hears of it, and stays with her father. That night Everson calls on her to sympathize with the old man, but mostly with Nondas. I don't know how they got around to the sheep-herder, but Nondas says:

"Some of the boys think he ought to be lynched to teach a lesson."

"Maybe he ought," says Johnny, "but he won't be; not while I'm in charge of him."

"What?" asks Nondas, flaring up. "Do you mean to say you wouldn't let them lynch a man who hurt my father?"

"You bet I wouldn't," says Johnny.

"Supposing I'd ask you to?" says Nondas.

"I wouldn't do it," Johnny answers.

"Now, here was a new one on Nondas. She recollected her bet with old Campbell, and she commenced to get sore."

"Senor Everson," she says, "you say you love me. If I asked you to do something for me that happened to interfere with what you call your duty, which would you consider first—love or duty?"

"Duty," says Johnny, without waiting a second.

"She got up and left him without a word, but she was boiling inside."

"Ah, them Mexican girls of the old days! All Chile pepper and red blood! They don't make 'em that way nowadays!"

"Don't you think that Johnny Everson wasn't sore, either. The idea that a girl would ask him such a question made him hot, so he just laughed and went off the other way and told his troubles to his friends. We all remembered Nondas's bet with old John; and while we didn't tell Everson, it tickled us that he had refused her. We wanted to see her pay that bet to Campbell."

"Nondas rode out of town all alone early that evening, headed for the El Morello. Bill Martin, who runs the general store, saw her go, and told Johnny about it. Johnny rode after her, but came back in an hour madder than thunder."

"She says she's going to get Jose de la Cruz and a bunch of Mexicans down the valley and come back here and take that prisoner away from me," he told a crowd of us over in Martin's."

"What'd you say?" asks some one.

"I told her if De la Cruz comes pestering around that jail I'll shoot his ears off," says Johnny, looking fierce. "And I'll do it, too. Then he walks out, calling back at us: 'Don't none of you fellows interfere, no matter what happens. This is my funeral.'"

"Old Martin makes a speech right away."

"Tell you what it is," he says. "I ain't for mixing up in love affairs, but if the little she-cat comes back here with any greasers and they hurt Johnny there'll be more funerals than his'n."

"And he picks up a Winchester and commences slipping shells into it without another word."

"That's whatever," says Spike Baldwin, corral boss of the Box outfit, and he goes to looking over his six pistol."

"The rest of us go busy inspecting our arsenals, when old Peters has an idea—which was strange for him."

"Let's wait and see what they do first," he suggests. "We can be near enough to stop any harm to John, but I think he'd rather handle it alone."

"After talking it over for a while, we thought so, too. So we decided to wait around and see what happened. We weren't opposed to them greasers lynching another of their own kind, but we didn't want them to hurt Johnny."

"I got it from a range-rider afterward what happened when Nondas got to the Garcia ranch and sent for De la Cruz. She was so mad by this time she was in tears. She told Jose how her father had been cut down by a worthless sheep-herder, and even then hadn't he dying. The American, Everson, had the sheep-herder in jail, and when she had suggested that he be given over for punishment the American had laughed at her."

"Of course, you can't blame De la Cruz for rising to the occasion. Nondas told him that she had told Johnny she intended getting De la Cruz to take the sheep-herder from jail, and there wasn't anything left for Jose to do. She also told him that Johnny had declared he would shoot Jose's ears off. In the presence of a dozen of the herders and range-riders, Nondas told De la Cruz:

"Jose," she said, "if you go and take that sheep-herder from the American, I'll marry you to-morrow. But not if you lose your ears."

"This was about as plain as plain him to shoot Everson first as you'd want to hear. De la Cruz was naturally hog-wild when he heard her. He commenced beating up all the Mexicans on the two ranches, and he got about fifty altogether. They were all anxious to go just for the excitement of the thing, not that they wanted trouble particularly."

"Nondas insisted on going with the crowd, and early the next morning they came riding into town like a herd of soldiers. Nondas and De la Cruz out in front."

"Every American in town was on deck when they arrived, and there seemed to be a few weapons scattered among them."

"The jail, as I told you, was next to the court house, in the centre of town, which was laid out around the two buildings. Both the jail and court house backed up against a hill, so there was only one approach to it, and that was by the front. We had scattered out and found places behind the houses near the jail in easy range, where we couldn't be seen, but where we could see everything that went on."

"No one had seen hide or hair of Johnny since he left Martin's store, but we knew he was somewhere around the town."

"Nondas and De la Cruz rode up the street with their pack of pirates, until they got about fifty yards from the jail. Then they stopped, puzzled by the quiet. The front wall of the jail ran up above the roof, leaving about two feet of breastwork on top, and pretty soon Johnny's head came a-peeking over the top. He had a rifle in his hand, and he looked some mad."

"What do you want?" he yelled.

"We want your prisoner, Senor Everson."

"Go 'way," said Johnny. "Go 'way and go home."

"De la Cruz then took a hand. "Senor Everson," he said in Mexican, which Johnny understood better'n he did English, "resistance is useless. You'd better give up the murderer at once and avoid trouble."

"I'll give you thunder if I catch you looking like you wanted him," said Johnny.

"He looked mighty brave standing up there all alone, and us behind the houses were commencing to get sore on that gang in the road trying to bluff him."

"Nondas whispered something to De la Cruz and started to ride up to the jail, the others standing still. She had a rifle in her hand, but Johnny only grinned at her. "Then some of the Mexicans started off as though to make a circle of the jail. De la Cruz stood still with the others. Johnny was watching them all closely. Nondas had just reached the jail door when something happened."

"There was a shot, and every one who was looking saw a puff of smoke from De la Cruz's saddle. He had fired from his hip."

"Johnny yelled and dropped behind his breastwork like he was shot. Nondas turned just in time to see De la Cruz fire, and heard Johnny yell. Things commenced to move so fast then that we didn't sift out an explanation until it was all over."

"The Americans behind the houses hadn't figured on there being any shooting at all. We thought that Johnny was hit, and started on a run for the jail. We heard Nondas shriek, then raise her rifle, and commence cutting loose at De la Cruz and his mob. I saw De la Cruz suddenly clap his hands to his head, yell, and then wheel his horse and start off on a dead run, his gang following him so fast they'd have run over him if his horse hadn't been beat."

"Meantime we were going for the jail, but Nondas suddenly turned back us and commenced pumping lead in our direction. Well, you can't shoot back at a woman, so we did the next best thing and ran for cover. Before we got clear old man Martin got a piece of his hair and a bit of scalp torn off, but no one was hurt."

"Then the doors of the jail opened, and out comes Johnny, the alviest thing you ever saw in your life. Nondas she shows she is still a woman by flopping over into his arms in a faint."

"We didn't get it all until we saw Johnny that night. We was sore on Nondas for shooting at us, but Johnny's story smoothed it all over."

"You see," he says, "Nondas told De la Cruz that there was to be no shooting under any circumstances. She says when she saw me her scheme went to pieces. She saw I wasn't going to scare, and she was riding up to tell me about that foot bet you all know about and get me to let them take the prisoner out just long enough to save her face. She said she meant to make some excuse to return him right away, but she wanted to show every one she hadn't faded. I'd have let her do it if I'd known."

"Then Jose must have got suspicious, and thought he'd bump me off to save any future trouble. When she saw me drop, which was only a bluff, Nondas got mad at De la Cruz, she says, and commenced shooting at him. Then when your bunch started rushing in she thought it was the other part of her own crowd, and turned loose in your neighborhood to keep you from breaking open the jail. After cutting all the trouble in the first place, she decided that it was her business to hold that prisoner for me. That's all."

"Son," says old man Martin, rubbing his head, "are you all going to marry that Nondas?"

"Sure," says Johnny.

"Well, my advice is to keep her away from shooting hardware," says Martin."

THE RETURN OF CHEE LEE By James Francis Dwyer.

THE arrows of a weasting sun ricocheted along the greasy surface of the sea, and the sand beach was a sheet of white flame under their fire. The coral teeth of the Great Barrier bent viciously at the charging combbers and tossed up spray that fell like a shower of blood. A Japanese pearling schooner, beating up towards the Straits was the one splash of brown in the belt of red ocean.

Verlund cursed. The strip of velvet shadow swung round the hut, as if hiding from the yellow glare that licked at it hungrily, and his bare legs had been stripped of their shade covering. I crawled after him as he snuggled closer to the wall. The locusts were singing noisily in a clump of small gum-trees near the beach, and I was thinking how silent it would be after they had finished their song when my companion startled me with a question.

"What brought you up here?" he asked, sharply.

"I am at a loss to say," I answered. "I drifted up to Rockhampton, and one Spring day the tropics bulged and sucked me in closer to the line."

Verlund was regarding me curiously. He was the true type of the spineless tropical deadbeat. The soul of man dies in the tropics. It swoons under the glamor, the color and the light, and wrecks like Verlund are the result. A tattered shirt ballooned over his sun-tanned body—a pair of trousers with amputated legs was his only other garment. His hair was thick, black and oily, covering his ears and hanging like the tassels of a mat before the heat-tormented eyes.

"Get back," he said, slowly. "Get down to Cairns and jump a boat to Sydney. This place is hell—plain hell."

The locusts stopped singing for a moment, and the silence fell again, deathlike, tangible. The sound made by the waves foundering on the beach seemed to be muffled by some smothering force.

"What brought you?" I questioned, endeavoring by speech to relieve my ears, that strained to catch faint sounds.

"Me?" he croaked, moistening the cracked lips as he stared up over the red waters towards China. "Why, the devil brought me, and a girl and something else kept me."

The locusts took up their chorus again, a wild, shrill, ear-splitting farewell to the dying sun. The sand dunes seemed to pant under the glare. I edged farther into the strip of shadow as the splintery beams bit fiercely at my exposed hands. Presently Verlund spoke again.

"This is where men come to die," he said. "This infernal place drugs them, poisons them, scorches their souls."

He laughed mirthlessly and kicked the stringy-bark sides of the shanty till the little glittering blades hurried into their holes.

"I got here in '94," he continued. "I was down at Melbourne and got cleaned out over the Cup. Patron won, it, thirty-one shot, and I contemplated a long dive into the Yarra when the tropics beckoned. They call you in the night when everything is still, drag your heart with a net that's all blue and rose-pink and sapphire blue, and you wake hating the hard streets and the hum of toll. That's how I was caught. I stowed away to Cairns, worked my way up here, and the devil chained me with the murmur of the surf and the silence, and I couldn't get away."

A Chinaman went down the hot track at a quick trot, and Verlund's eyes watched him through the screen of uncombed hair. The Celestial turned a headland and was lost to view.

"She belonged to that yellow swine's partner," he muttered, nodding towards the spot where the Chinaman had disappeared.

"Chee Lee?" I questioned.

"Yes, Chee Lee. She was the finest, sweetest little ball of femininity that ever came down out of Chrysanthemum Land. That hound had no ties on her—Chee Lee, I mean. Who the devil told you about Chee Lee?"

"I heard something," I muttered evasively. "Something about you waiting to see him."

Verlund's discolored teeth showed as he grinned. "Oh, yes, Hanrahan talks a lot, doesn't he? Well, I am waiting to see Chee Lee. He's been gone eleven years in November. He grabbed 'The Waratah' that night and bolted down to Rockhampton and I lost him there—lost all trace of him, so I came back here and watched. Sun Low was Chee Lee's partner. Sun Low is a scoundrel. Chee can't get a sixpence of his own money till he comes back for it. He'll come some day to settle with Sun, and I'll be here to settle with him—see?"

I nodded. I understood why Verlund's credit was good at the grocery store owned by Sun Low. Verlund was the bookyeman, that kept Sun's partner out of the way.

"She used to sit on that old veranda next Buttan Singh's, where the wistaria blossom hangs like bunches of grapes, and every time I passed I wondered why she didn't bolt from that old, toothless murderer. She'd peep at me from between the flowers just wondering—there were only two pure whites up here then. One day, when the old devil was knocked out with too many pipes, she saw a diamond snake wiggle up over the veranda boards, and she gave a little cry of fear just as I was passing. Sun Low was in the store, but I flung the snake at him after I killed it, and he ran screaming down the track, leaving me with her and that doped dog, Chee Lee. She laughed when I chased Sun, just a delicious, little, fluffy laugh, and that yellow pig snored on the floor. I ought to have killed him then—the law doesn't work at a gallop up this way."

"Then I acted the fool. I took an interest in that little child just because there was no one round here but the scum of Asia. You think it wasn't my job, but it was. It's a white man's job to look after a child no matter what her color, and that den wasn't the place for her. It went along like that for five months, perhaps six. Sometimes I thought that Chee looked at me curiously, but I didn't care for him. Then I determined to go South again, and the night before I left she came down to the hut and begged me to take her in the schooner down as far as Cairns. Of course I was a fool. Everybody I tell this story to thinks the same, but they didn't know that pock-marked Chinaman. They didn't know what kind of a quarter this was at that time, and they didn't know that child. I'm a white man—at least I was one then."

"I was working for Tatsu Garo, and I was using his schooner. That little kid was going to meet me down at the point, but I changed my mind and slipped up to the store when that pig was in his dope dream, and told her to meet me at high tide in the mangrove trees up the creek. Chee was snoring behind the canvas, but afterward I fancied I heard him chuckle."

"It was dark when Tatsu and I pulled up to the mangroves. I saw something white in near the left bank and I called out, but she didn't answer. I called again and again—then we pulled in closer and saw. She was strapped by the ankles to a thick limb, her head hanging downward, and the tide was surging round her shoulders like as if it was pleased with the job Chee left it. That's the story. I swore by the memory of my mother that I would avenge the death of that little kid, and I'm holding out. She was nothing to me—she was just a little child woman up in this spot alone. Yes, I'm waiting for Chee. He'll come back some day, and we'll have a reckoning."

Five months afterward I was speaking to Kuttan Soo, the Hindu horse dealer, in the main street of Cairns, when a mounted trooper, with a white prisoner handcuffed to his stirrup iron, rode slowly along. Something familiar about the amputated legs of the trousers made me lift my eyes to the face of the shackled one, and a look of recognition flashed across it.

"I got him," he yelled triumphantly. "I got Chee—Chee Lee!"

"Murder," whispered Kuttan Soo. "He knifed a Chinaman at Red Point yesterday."

It was Verlund.

VANDERLIP WARNS OF NEW DANGER

Declares American Government Is in No Shape To Make Loans

'IT'S TIME TO WAKE UP'
Asserts Situation Abroad Is Worse Than Nine Months Ago

New York, January 14.—Speaking at a dinner in the Hotel Astor at which Sir George Paish, the British economist, estimated that the total needs of Europe for the next ten years would be about $20,000,000,000 in food and raw materials international bankers asserted that further extension of credit to Europe by the American Government would be impossible. Those who expressed this conclusion most emphatically were Paul D. Cravath, Frank A. Vanderlip, Senator Walter E. Edge of New Jersey, and Herbert S. Houston, the publisher.

Mr. Vanderlip expressed a warning that the financial situation in Europe was even more critical than when he issued a report upon the seriousness of financial and political affairs there nine months ago, shortly before he retired from the presidency of the National City Bank upon the completion of his visit to Europe. He added that a "dangerous situation" also had arisen in the expansion of credits in this country, and that "it's time to wake up."

"Under no circumstances should we grant additional Government credit to Europe," said Mr. Vanderlip, "that I felt all the time. We must go directly to the investors for this money. In the last nine months we have dissipated our own ability to grant credits. We have blown our own credit situation to such a point that we cannot grant credits as we could last Spring even in the present danger of political chaos."

Mr. Vanderlip spoke extensively after the Chairman, Paul D. Cravath, had recalled the report made by him nine months ago upon his return from Europe and had pointed out that the facts presented in that report had been found to be accurate. He said Europe was in even worse condition now than when he finished his visit there last Spring. Speaking of the low rate of exchange prevailing now, Mr. Vanderlip said:

"We may face a breakdown in exchange that will even surpass the breakdown of the present. There is a deeper reason for the present low exchange than the difference between imports and exports. All of the fall below the gold movement point depreciates exchange. The currency printing presses are still working."

NEED FOR MORE DATA
The speaker said that it was impossible to keep closely in touch with European financial affairs, the differences between income and expenses in the governmental budgets, and said that if the American Government was unable to furnish more data for the bankers "we must get it ourselves." He pointed out that action should be taken at once and asserted that "the possibility of chaos spreading is serious."

It was urged that some aid be extended to Central Europe, he said, so that the wave of Bolshevism could be checked. He said that all that stood between Soviet Russia and Germany was an army of 1,000,000 "half clad Poles without a shirt to their backs." He pointed out the possibility of the establishment in Germany of a Government that might be friendly with Bolshevist Russia, and that both might seek to impose themselves upon countries "further west."

One of the suggestions advanced by Sir George Paish for the relief of Europe was the floating of bonds by the League of Nations, a security to be protected by the collective credit of the members of the League. In introducing Sir George, Mr. Cravath referred to the "erroneous report that he came here to float a huge loan for Great Britain," and explained that his mission was "to convince us of the seriousness of the situation in Central Europe and to enlist our sympathy in fighting famine there."

"The question that demands answer," he said, "is how the American people will finance the sale of the great quantities of produce they expect to sell in Europe in 1920, and which Europe needs for her preservation. If the American people continue to rely upon normal commercial credits then a complete breakdown of the exchanges of commerce and trade is already within sight."

"If, however, credit is organized and obtained from the investors of the United States then it will be possible for the American people to sell all the produce and all the goods they can produce, and it will be possible for Europe to purchase the food and material upon the acquisition of which the salvation of her peoples so completely depends."

WORLD FOOD SUPPLY SHORT
Sir George said the world supply of food was short and that a shortage in the countries of Central Europe made it desirable that some international agency should undertake the allocation of world food supplies and give the stricken countries a share. He said that Europe needed not only all the surplus food and materials from the United States but from all other countries that had surpluses and that some scheme of finance would have to be devised to aid the European nations during their period of rehabilitation.

It was one of his proposals that the money to finance the production, transportation, and sale of food should be taken at once and asserted that "the possibility of chaos spreading is serious."

It was urged that some aid be extended to Central Europe, he said, so that the wave of Bolshevism could be checked. He said that all that stood between Soviet Russia and Germany was an army of 1,000,000 "half clad Poles without a shirt to their backs." He pointed out the possibility of the establishment in Germany of a Government that might be friendly with Bolshevist Russia, and that both might seek to impose themselves upon countries "further west."

Edge turned to Sir George and said:

"We can't send Europe any more cash. We'll send goods. We can't send cash because to do that we would have to tax all the people."

"Only extraordinary measures will enable this country to prevent the serious consequences of the hurricane from extending to its shores," said Mr. Cravath. "Unfortunately the need of finding capital in this country to meet the greatest financial crisis the world has ever seen comes at a time when the conditions resulting from the war make it more difficult than ever before to assemble private capital."

"The capacity of the banks to meet the crisis is approaching exhaustion. Almost all the relief which their machinery can furnish has already been provided. Very little help can be gained from individual investors of large wealth because the burdens of the income tax make it impossible for them to invest in taxable securities. A colossal Government loan is out of the question."

Herbert S. Houston also pointed out that a Government loan was not feasible and said that no money should be advanced to Europe except for relief. He said he believed that extension of credit should be brought to a prewar basis. Otto H. Kahn spoke on the necessity of changes in the income tax law to revive the initiative of business men.

The dinner was one of a series held in the Hotel Astor by the Council on Foreign Relations and about 150 bankers and business men attended.

We Demand More Legal Holidays

By ROY K. MOULTON

One great regret of all lovers of freedom (from work) is the fact that we have not enough legal holidays. Several persons and institutions, which should have been honored thus many years ago, have been neglected. We therefore petition Congress to establish the following additional legal holidays at once:

Groundhog Day.—That faithful little animal, the groundhog, has labored industriously many years in predicting the weather. The public has learned to depend upon him, for when he predicts six weeks of cold weather, the country can safely depend upon six weeks of heat, and vice versa.

William J. Bryan's Birthday.—For this American has endeavored to spend enough years as President to entitle him to the honor of a legal holiday. It has not been his fault that the country has not availed itself of his services. Then again, the country owes him a deep debt of gratitude for discovering that grape juice is a beverage.

Straw Hat Day.—The first of June offers an excellent excuse for a legal holiday. After picking out his hat, and fighting with his wife over it, every man is tired enough for a holiday. We believe there will be no argument on the part of Congress over the justice of this demand.

Mushroom Day.—A day should be set aside as a memorial to the annual quota of mushroom experts who eat toadstools by mistake. On that day lectures should be given throughout the country by professors who know seven-teen ways to tell a mushroom from a toadstool, none of which is any good.

Flivver Day.—The invention of the road crawler was a memorable event marking a new era and revolutionizing our habits to the extent that walking became a pleasure. This has been of great physical benefit to the race. The day upon which the first piece of clockwork was made to tick successfully within a tin box, mounted on wheels, should be memorialized forever.

ENEMIES SLAIN
BY PERFUMES
OF DE MEDICIBoudoir Secrets Of Catherine Brought To Light By Discovery Of Scents

Paris, Dec. 30.—Boudoir secrets of Catherine de Medici, describing in detail the art of perfumery in which the court of Louis XIV. excelled, after more than two centuries have come to light in the dusty library of a Blois reclus.

The "lost art of using scents" is described by Rene le Florentin, chief perfumer to the court of Louis, whom Catherine de Medici established in a sumptuous mansion at Pont-au-Change. Scented poisons, with which lovely Catherine rid herself of her enemies were manufactured in this mansion.

SCENTS FOR YOUNG AND OLD

The parchment manuscript, written in old French and Latin, has after months of labor been finally deciphered by a group of French savants. In it are the following hints:

"A man's elegance is recognised by the excellence of his doublet, hat and cravat, but that of a woman is discoverable in her choice of perfumes. There are, for instance scents peculiarly adaptable for use by old women, others for young ones, and still others the uses of which must be reserved to affairs of romance.

"Verbena and iris are the perfumes for the young girl. These are fresh effusions having about them an air of chaste poetry. Heliotrope, strong and full-flavored, is alone suitable for the young brunette who has glowing eyes and a lustrous skin, and carnation is equally a distillation which should be used exclusively by brunettes. But lavender is a perfume for blondes.

HARMONY IN PERFUMES

"Discordant notes in perfumes are as perceptible to the aesthetic sense as those struck on a harp. A woman should never use two perfumes at the same time unless they harmonise, forming a sort of melody of scent.

"What few women realise is that perfumes have their colors just as everything else. Are you wearing black? Then sprinkle violet scent on your dress and headgear. Carnation suits red costumes, jamine yellow, odoriferous citron, blue.

"In the home care should be taken that the perfumes used do not clash with the surroundings. The same perfume used habitually by the mistress of the house should always be sprinkled in the room where intimates are received, but violet mixed with a little heliotrope forms a delicious perfume for a bedroom. For a dining room choose always a very fresh and simple distillation which brings visions of the open field.

"It should not be forgotten that scents are profoundly seductive. It was with perfumes as much as by her beauty that Cleopatra charmed Marc Anthony.

"A vulgar perfume is as destructive of woman's beauty as a front tooth misplaced. Woman should realise that scent is not a luxury, but a necessity of elegance breathing the very essence of poetry and romance."

The memoirs, written in a fine, close handwriting on thin parchment, begin with a recital of the history of perfume from the days when the priests of Heliopolis offered scents before the altars of their gods, and describe the origin of the custom following which the wise men from the East came to Bethlehem bearing gifts of frankincense and myrrh to the cradle of the infant Messiah.

Rene le Florentine, considered in the seventeenth century the greatest scent distiller, relates how the Egyptians of old made a fetish of perfume, how when one chief visited another he brought with him many dromedaries, each bearing 300 pounds of cinnamon, canelle, iris, incense Kaphi, saffron and myrrh. Hebrews, Asiatics and Greeks in olden days were fanatics in matters of perfume, the manuscript states.

One paragraph in the memoirs is causing much discussion in learned Paris medical circles. In it Rene le Florentine asserts that perfume is the best disinfectant and bases it on the fact of the lavish use of scented distillations by the ancients. During the cholera epidemic in Paris, he says, not one of the many thousands who succumbed was a worker in a perfumery.

Socialism As An Alien Enemy

Flagrant Un-Americanism Of Its Present Management And Activities Is Defeating Its Busy Campaign Of Propaganda

By A. U. S. GOVERNMENT AGENT

The American Socialist of today has forgotten many things; perhaps pre-eminently among all of them he has forgotten what it used to feel like to be an American. His head is full of Bolshevism, and in spite of the fact that Bolshevism, as variously interpreted by imported and native pundits, has split his party forty ways he clings to it and wonders why in this first year of reconstruction Americans continue to treat the Socialist Party as an alien enemy. It should be some- body's duty nowadays to recall to him just how nine-tenths of this current animosity is entirely his own fault. Certainly those of us Americans who were young enough to fight in the war can remember a type of Socialist pro- selyting that is very different from the pestilential Bolshevism we are having today. We can re- member, even if the Socialists seem to have forgotten it, the time when a man could consider becoming a Socialist without first wiping his feet on America.

In the days when A. M. Simons was a devout and orthodox Social- istic, in the remote days before the war, he stopped off at a small town in Pennsylvania to deliver the "message" to the crowd of ordinary Americans who used to turn out in those days and expose themselves to an uplifting evening of earnest utopianism. Simons talked rather harshly of the Con- stitution, and drew a rather ap- palling picture, as was his wont, of the dreary selfishness and economic greed which he declared were the chief contributions of the fathers thereof to American history. Simons and Professor Beard of Columbia are chiefly re- sponsible for the groundwork by which Socialists allege that this, and not the school-book version, is American history. He talked of the simple Pennsylvanians more or less ex cathedra.

In the audience, however, was a blackcoated man with the clerical collar of the Episcopal Church. This clerical man had his own radical ideas, and the original sin reposing in the said fathers, but he put a lot of ques- tions to Simons about the advis- ability of using this doctrine to stir up class hatred and breed the bad blood of social revolution. He was a very large man, and finally he said something, "I don't deny you are doing some good, Mr. Simons, but we need the Red Cross in this social war you speak of as well as the fighters."

Simons is a small man and a bit of a Celt, and he couldn't let this chance slip. "You're a fine slacker, you are," he said; "think of a little fellow like me out- scrapping in the front lines while a great big galoot like you sticks behind in the rear, in the dress- ing station. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

The crowd, who knew and liked the clerical man, howled with de- light, and the clerical man, as he afterward confessed, became a So- cialist on the spot. He was one, too, and when shortly afterward he became Bishop of Utah he threw some hot shot in quite the Simons manner into a very shocked ecclesiastical conven- tion. His name was Spaulding, Bishop Spaulding of Utah, and be- fore he died, not very long ago, he became quite an insurgent, a clean American insurgent for all his Socialism, and played a notable part in his generation.

To us who are grappling with Bolshevism, with American So- cialists who forgot all about their Americanism during the war, the generation seems a long way off when this cause was making head- way among Americans, and when a big man like Spaulding could be converted into socialism on a sort of boisterous emotional wave. They aren't biting that way nowa- days. Yet the various and motley successors of the Socialists of those days, the Communists and the Communist Laborers, the "left wingers," and the Berger- pre-German Socialists are all fish- ing and fishing and deluding themselves with the old faith that the growth of the Socialist move- ment is something like a law of nature, which can't be stopped.

It has been stopped, among reg- ular, upstanding Americans at any rate, and it is no discredit to American liberalism to affirm that it has not only been stopped, but stepped upon hard. Another Socialist, parson, Irwin St. John Tucker, has been going about the East lately, preaching much the same socialism he himself used to preach in Spaulding's day. But there is a new twist to it; he thrusts down our throats a vin- dictive of the Socialists, and he tells Americans that the spirit of America was wastefully, criminally and wholly wrong in the war. This is a new Socialist mood, and a new American mood has arisen to meet it.

The American Legion, which may have its own ideas about or- ganized capital, certainly has its own American ideas about this kind of socialism. They got to- gether at Reading and stopped his speech. At Philadelphia, other Americans, other American Le- gionaries, stopped him again. He passed on to New England. Some Communists got him a hearing at New Haven, but some Americans stopped him again at Springfield. They continue to stop him. This orthodox Socialist who is not an anarchist, this devout Christian Socialist preacher who claims that according to his lights he is as good an American as anybody.

"What is the matter?" asks Tucheir. "Is there no more free speech in America for Socialists?"

The answer isn't exactly clear, and it is worth while digging a little beneath the facts of this first turbulent year of reconstruction to make it clear. Perhaps a young man named Zimmerman, who attended the inaugural conference at Chicago last September of the Communist Labor Party, expressed it as well as anybody. Zimmerman was one of the "left wing" Socialists who believed the pre-war socialism of Bishop Spaul- ding was so dead that it was neces- sary to break up the old party and form a wholly new revolu- tionary body. Zimmerman came from the very American Commu- nism of Indiana, and in spite of the fact that as an ardent young revolutionist he was in a very per- fect state of grace, one thing about this convention stuck in his Hoosier crop. He didn't like the name; and when the very able machine which ran that conven- tion prepared to ease that article of the new Constitution expedi- tiously through, Zimmerman rose and vehemently protested.

He said that the idea of commu- nism had no roots in America; he had the courage to say before all these internationalists that the Communist Labor Party wouldn't be successful because the name wasn't American, because it meant to Americans on the face of it an alien and flagrantly trans- planted idea. And he concluded, as nearly as I can remember, something like this: "And I say that to send me back among the farmers of Indiana with the job as an organizer of pinning a name like that on them is just the dream of a lot of half-baked intellectuals who don't know anything or who don't care anything about the American people."

Zimmerman's idea is not a com- plicated one, but Socialist and Communist intellectuals notwith- standing, this is not a very com- plicated period in American history. The new order of Socialists has departed from the traditions of Americanism except that of claiming free speech for them- selves. And Americans, in a new mood of their own which the Socialists do not comprehend at all, are not only no longer good-nat- uredly tolerant of them, but are perfectly ready to face the drastic step of denying them any hear- ing at all.

That is the first point of differ- ence between the Socialist world of Bishop Spaulding and the So- cialist world of the Rev. Mr. Tucker—Americanism. Between the two worlds has come one war, and it was with the challenge of the war that the American So- cialist movement began to lose its grip on the conscience of the people. The Socialist group of our two great allies and of our two great ene- mies stuck by their people; American Socialists, when they passed the St. Louis resolution calling America's part in the war a very large man, and finally he said something, "I don't deny you are doing some good, Mr. Simons, but we need the Red Cross in this social war you speak of as well as the fighters."

Perhaps a young man named Zimmerman, who attended the inaugural conference at Chicago last September of the Communist Labor Party, expressed it as well as anybody. Zimmerman was one of the "left wing" Socialists who believed the pre-war socialism of Bishop Spaul- ding was so dead that it was neces- sary to break up the old party and form a wholly new revolu- tionary body. Zimmerman came from the very American Commu- nism of Indiana, and in spite of the fact that as an ardent young revolutionist he was in a very per- fect state of grace, one thing about this convention stuck in his Hoosier crop. He didn't like the name; and when the very able machine which ran that conven- tion prepared to ease that article of the new Constitution expedi- tiously through, Zimmerman rose and vehemently protested.

He said that the idea of commu- nism had no roots in America; he had the courage to say before all these internationalists that the Communist Labor Party wouldn't be successful because the name wasn't American, because it meant to Americans on the face of it an alien and flagrantly trans- planted idea. And he concluded, as nearly as I can remember, something like this: "And I say that to send me back among the farmers of Indiana with the job as an organizer of pinning a name like that on them is just the dream of a lot of half-baked intellectuals who don't know anything or who don't care anything about the American people."

thical Patagonians, by taking in each other's washing.

The reason for this second char- acteristic of the new Bolshevistic Socialism as distinguished from the old, this patent sterility of the new factions getting really new blood into their organizations, becomes still clearer when you consider the factions themselves. If you fear that the propaganda of these new parties has any likeli- hood of sapping the foundations of American life, look at their supreme and paramount expres- sion, the Communist Party. The Communist Party's origin as a separate party dates from the tripartite Socialist conferences in Chicago early in September of this year, at which time it proudly chose as its position of the extreme left. To its founders America was simply a geographical expression; unnaturalized citizens among its delegates so over- shadowed any other element that its rivals called it "The Un- naturalized Citizens' League," and the membership answered the description, and still answers it, perfectly.

In fact, one can glean so much from the current factional So- cialist press of the glaring un- Americanism of this Communist Party that it will serve our pur- pose here simply to underscore a few of the most conclusively es- tablished points. Its origin was decreed by a group of men who are not only not Americans but any stretch of loyalty or sym- pathy; they are not American patriots. They are Russians and as two bolting delegates from their convention forcefully put it: "They are dominated by a revolu- tionary chauvinism as harmful to the working classes of America as American chauvinism is to the working classes of Russia." The 10,000 (claimed) members of the Russian Communist Federa- tion are the solid block around which the party has been formed. Attached to them, the Secretary of that organization, Alexander Stockitsky, a Russian Bolshevik from Moscow, now under a long delayed sentence of deportation and Gregory Weinstein, editor of Novy Mir, the Russian Bolshevik official daily, the foremost Bol- shevist "scientific" executive in this country, are the wholehearted Russian triumvirate who dominate it as absolutely as any revolutionary party was ever do- minated outside of Russia.

Attached to them, each under its autocratic foreign executive, are the Slavic language groups of the old Socialist Party, Letts, Lithuanians, Poles and Ukrain- ians; drawn into this essentially Russian orbit are the great ma- jority of the Jewish, Hungarian, and South Slavic federations, and, to a lesser extent, the Finns, pro- portionately the largest racial re- volutionary block in the country; the Italians and the Scandinavians. The Germans probably count less in the councils of the Communist Party, that is, outside of that rare racial group, the Americans, than anybody else.

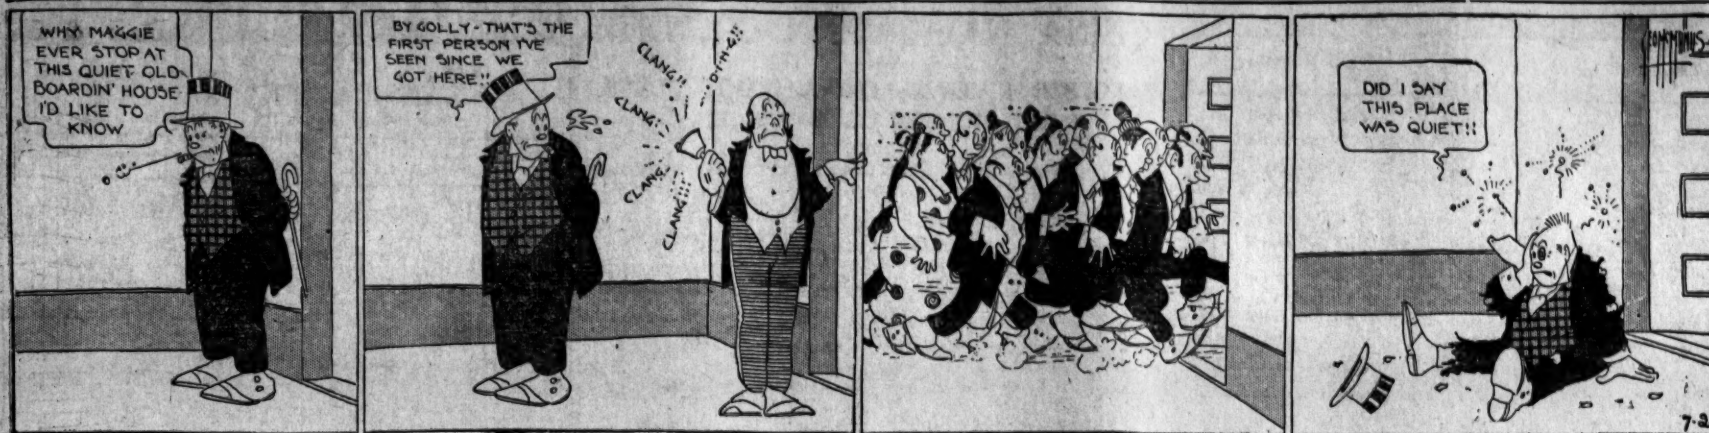

The Russians early succeeded in lining up the leaders of the vari- ous racial groups, and in the in- augural convention at Chicago they smothered what were de- siderately referred to as "our En- glish-speaking comrades" on every vote that was taken. It happen- ed, for instance, that some mem- bers of the Communist Party, the group that stands in the exposed position midway be- tween the Communists and the orthodox Socialists, wanted to have a joint committee meeting with the Communist executives to establish a "basis of unity." Stockitsky, Weinstein, and the rest issued the fiat that they had one basis of unity with the Com- munist Labor Party, and that was that that party should commit- tee and join the already com- pleted and perfect Communist or- ganization. Whereupon the hand- ful of Americans protested that if the Communist laborers weren't heard they would mildly sabotage the convention, and, led by Charles Ruthenberg, ex-leader of the Socialist Party in Cleveland, they proceeded to withdraw from all committees and wait the caucus's next move. The Russian caucus decided to concede, and working with a smoothness which Lenin might well envy, it reversed itself with a margin of less than five votes on the grand turnover—and this with no discussion from the floor, but on the Steering Committee's undisputed orders. The joint committees duly met and entirely failed to find their basis of agreement; but that is non- essential to the point of this story. The point is that Ameri- can Socialists ran up for the first time in Chicago against the solid and unthinking party discipline of alien Bolshevism, and their naive and instinctive reaction was to be just as outraged at it as any other group of Americans would be.

This might account to them for the stubborn rage at the new so- cialism of the rest of us Ameri- cans, still unenfeebled by feeding it the Bolshevistic trough. But it made no difference to the infatuated Communists in the framework within which they prepared to re- ceive the American people. The party organization was finished off on the same rigid, simon pure dictatorial lines on which it had begun, and it was put into the hands of the almost completely alien executive which is now run- ning it, a perfect, almost photo- graphic copy of the Communist Party of Russia. All connection with the "bourgeoisie," all Com- munist participation in any other phase of American life, save that directly concerned with "the mass conquest of power by the prole- tariat," was ruled out and made anathema. And the convention adopted as its official emblem, not the clasped hands of universal fellowship of the Socialists, but the flamboyant red flag of revolu- tion spread over the entire globe with the motto, "All Power to the Workers!"

This party is therefore simply a hyphenated Soviet, operating on American soil as a direct ex- tension of the Soviet Government of Russia and as completely un- like the old Socialist Party as Bishop Spaulding's ideas of the Christian religion, for instance, would be unlike Trotsky's. And as a suitable climax of its entire inappropriateness in America one may regard its somewhat comic relations with Ludwig Martens, who is now pretending against the American courts to be the official and diplomatically immune repre- sentative of the Bolshevik Gov- ernment. The ruling Russian block of the Communist Party have met and soberly noted that they collectively, and not Ludwig Martens individually, should re- present the Russian and the lamps will burn clear and bright. Never throw away the burners unless they are broken. This treatment cleans out all tubes and makes them like new.

Stale bread can be finely diced salted a little, and browned in butter or butter substitute. This is a very nice addition to beef soup or any other soup. Soaked in milk, it makes the basis of very nice breakfast pancakes. The necessary amount of soda or baking powder for the whole mass should be added and the mixture thickened with flour to a thinish and smooth consistency. However, the bread should not be soaked over night because this makes the cakes sticky. But if the well-soaked bread is used at once, the cakes will be as light as if made of flour alone and will taste better.

When packing pictures, a piece of cork placed at the corners of the frames, between each two, will prevent them from getting rubbed and avoid any fear of breakage.

Hats For Winter Wear

By RITA STUYVESANT

It is interesting to note that even though the air is full of snags and frost, lovely Spring hats are appearing like an oasis in a Winter season. Flower laden hats, small and chic, show out on people's eyes to a curious world, while others bear a fruit ornamentation on a background of silver or gold.

To wear with one's fur coat (and who is not wearing a fur coat this year for prosperity) there is a delightful little hat that is just made to adorn frivolous head. It shows a narrow brim, curved gracefully over the right eye with a somewhat receding brim in the rear. Of course it is fashioned of silver tissue—as all ultra-smart hats are this season, but to emphasize the whiteness of one's complexion, the underside is faced with black satin.

Very becoming, too, is the soft crown that fits the head so snugly, and is wreathed so beautifully with tiny flowers and luscious fruits. To give a delicate color to the silver tissue, this clever little hat first covered itself with French blue crepe.

But if your fancy runs to golden things you may choose a hat of gold cloth, lightly veiled with black maline. Of pronounced charm was a lovely hat of this type that I recently discovered in a well-known shop. The hat was shaped like an inverted bowl, and covered tightly with the rich gold material. Pretty small fruits adorned the edge, and to prevent a gearing effect the black maline drifted over the hat with subtle witchery and allowed a bit to droop over the edge, concealing, yet revealing, Madame's eyes.

Though not a new model, a turban of metal brocade is still a pleasing, popular one. One whose golden line is reflected in every golden line combines itself effectively with black satin, and chooses nothing other than its becoming shape and rich fabric to insure its style.

Do you think it is too early for a straw bonnet? If you do you are not in keeping with our modern modistes, for their show-cases are rapidly filling with new Spring models. But to retain a Winter note, these clever people have combined velvet, satin, duvetyne and velour with straw for the first hats.

One hat of simple charm is of freedom blue duvetyne, and allied itself most peaceably with straw of the same shade. But to lend that gay touch so important to smart millinery, it embroiders sprigs of Spring flowers in brilliant colored wool.

Fraternel Friendship

A curse of a very nervous temperament was constantly making awkward remarks intended as compliments. Having distinguished himself in an unusual degree during a gathering of clergy at the bishop's palace, he was taken to task for his failings by a senior curate who was one of his companions on the way home. "Look here!" said the senior decidedly. "You are a donkey! Why cannot you keep quiet instead of making your asinine remarks? Mind you, I am speaking to you now as a brother!"

The Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaels

I used to think that fiction meant book or tale or play, but now that old conviction is gone from me to stay. I fear no contradiction when I have had my say. For local story-tellers are daily handing 'round tales strange as the best sellers in finest cloth skin bound; both farm and city dwellers can skin the ~~animal~~ bound. Now, from a field quite ample with fiction-makers fitted to serve us as a sample of folks in fable skilled, let's take for an example a Jane of modern build. Suppose a friend comes calling upon this pretty maid; though Jane's thoughts are appalling says she a spade's a spade? Ah no! Jane goes to stalling and thus her art's displayed. She says "It's ages, dearie, since we have had a chat. To see you seems a theory, and what a lovely hat! But later: "Gee! I'm weary That woman is a cat!" It may be Jane's beau brings her a box of lemon drops, some candied prunes and things or some other lollipops. Jane hates 'em; but she springs her most glowing fiction crops. She cries: "Now tell me, pettie, how did you ever chance to bring these prunes, so pretty, so hinting of romance. I fear you went in debt, eh? What wild extravagance!" Some carping folks may label her work as being coarse; but mostly Jane is able to talk till she is hoarse, for many guys like fable the best of all discourse. I used to think that fiction was written in a book; but that's an old conviction I long ago forsook. It's used without restriction most everywhere I look.
